LIKE NO PLACE ELSE IN ATLANTA

Nestled just north of the busy Atlanta city center lies the Village of Vinings. More than a hundred years ago, this quaint corner was a fashionable retreat for city dwellers and now lives on as an oasis of the past and present, calling us back to quieter times.

Today, the Vinings Village charm lives on with boutiques, coffeehouses, fine restaurants and unique stores.

At the heart of the Village lies Vinings Jubilee. Built in 1986 with 19th-century architecture by Felix Cochran, a Vinings resident, the center sets the stage for the style and tone of the community. Its outdoor collective of stores and restaurants with patio seating rivals many resort environments, while staying true to Vinings' unique, historical sense of style.

VININGS' ROOTS IN HISTORY

Vinings old-time village charm is rooted in a rich and storied past. In the early 1800s, Hardy Pace settled along the banks of the Chattahoochee River, running a thriving ferry business, Paces Ferry. Pace's success enabled him to amass more than 10,000 acres of land northwest of Atlanta, some of which eventually became Vinings.

During the Civil War, Vinings was a key strategic point in the battle of Atlanta. Sherman first viewed Atlanta from Vinings Mountain and used Hardy Paces' home as a headquarters during the early stages of the battle, setting fire to the 17-room, antebellum home as he left Atlanta for his march to the sea.

In the early 1900's Vinings grew to become a favorite spot for Atlantans and their social picnics. Tucked into the woods, beside a river at the foot of mountains, Vinings was the perfect spot. Picnicking was an all-day event and included formal invitations and dancing at the Pavilion. The structure is still maintained today by the Vinings Historic Preservation Society, along with other remnants of the original Pace estate.
